NOTES:

Other useful sources of information include biographical compilations and newspapers (some newspapers, including the New York Times, are of course indexed), and the large body of literature in languages other than English. In addition, government documents concerning the production of government-funded documentaries can be found. In a few cases production of documentaries have resulted in litigation; in these cases legal records are available.

Some of the better known individual film- and videomakers will be featured in biographical dictionaries and biographical encyclopedias, as well as in the biographical index, BioBase. Also consult Sadoul's Dictionary of Films and Dictionary of Film Makers. Especially useful indexes for periodical literature include Art Index as well as Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature. Film catalogues are useful sources of information on particular films and tapes, and sometimes on individual directors.
